Mdina

5, St Paul's Square, Mdina - Mdina - Malta

The Mdina Cathedral was the only large church on the island of Malta for about 300 years. Built during the Norman period, the building suffered considerable damage caused by an earthquake on the 11th January 1963. Rebuilt by Maltese architect Lorenzo Gafà, it was consecrated on the 8th October 1702. According to tradition, the Cathedral was built on the site where governor Publius was reported to have met Saint Paul following his shipwreck off the Maltese coast.
